Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.

Then on Jackie Robinson's 75th birthday, Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig announced that Robinson's number would be retired by every team in the Major Leagues. Selig said, "Jackie Robinson's life and his accomplishments are a reminder to us all of what we can achieve when we are at our best." Selig's decision was made after Major League Baseball had consulted with Robinson's widow, Rachel, who was in attendance at the ceremony.